CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

CIA Research Reports. The research reports of the CIA are among our most useful contemporary documents for the study of the Soviet Union. Compiled from sources throughout the world and analyzed by experts, these research reports provide valuable material for basic and advanced research in all aspects of Soviet studies as well as in U.S. foreign policy toward the Soviets. Through its research reports the CIA examines important developments in Soviet domestic politics, foreign relations, defense posture, and national economy so that the President and his advisers can have accurate information on which to base strategic decisions. By covering the period from 1946 through the early 1970s, and by collecting and publishing the research reports for the first time, this series makes a treasure house of source material available to a wide range of readers.
